Sinopsis

The Krefeld Villas, Haus Lange and Haus Esters (1927-30), have long been considered minor works of architect van der Rohe, and have rarely been regarded critically. Kleinman (architecture, State U. of New York, Buffalo) and Van Duzer (architecture, Arizona State U.) revisit the villas, and discuss the history of the project, the intersection of art and architecture (specifically the work of Sol LeWitt and Richard Serra), the structure of the buildings, and the aesthetic and philosophical concerns. The book is amply illustrated with photographs of the exterior and interior, working drawings, elevations and floor plans.
