Description

The ninth edition of Textbook on Civil Liberties and Human Rights provides a straightforward and stimulating account of this fascinating area of law.

This essential textbook covers all the main topics taught on undergraduate civil liberties and human rights modules. It provides thorough, critical coverage of crucial areas such as police powers, freedom of expression, terrorism, and public order. Throughout the text the law is set in its social and political context. There is full discussion of all relevant post Human Rights Act 1998 jurisprudence, as well as analysis of the latest decisions made by the European Court of Human Rights.

Features

Coverage is fully focused on mapping to civil liberties and human rights law modules, ensuring that this is the ideal text to use on such modules

Questions for discussion are included at the end of each chapter, to check students' understanding and to encourage them to engage with the key issues

Suggestions for further reading assist and encourage students to develop their knowledge and understanding of the topic

An Online Resource Centre containing updates and web links to related sites enables students to remain fully up to date with developments in this fast-moving field

Includes a new chapter on Article 6 of the European Convention, the right to a fair trial, to ensure that this important topic is given adequate coverage
